Preface

Mass transportation has continued to receive increasing public support both in Montana and nationwide. This public support has led to growth in the number of special elderly and handicapped transportation systems as well as public systems across the State. With this continued growth has come the increased need to update the 1980 transportation service inventory.

INTRODUCTION

The previous shifting trend of urban transit from the private to the public sector has been completed. Most of our larger communities in Montana have publicly-owned transit systems which serve their citizens. Local officials are becoming increasingly aware of their community's public transportation needs and are involved in finding ways of meeting these needs. To illustrate this point, previously only Billings, Butte, Missoula, and Helena had public transit systems within the state. Public transit services are now available in Great Falls, Valley, McCone,Daniels, Garfield, and Powder River counties and on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Reservations.

With the increasing numbers of elderly, local housing and work programs for the handicapped, diminished taxi cab operations and changing social attitudes, the high demand for special transportation in our rural areas and smaller communities continues.

With the diminishing sources of federal funds for operating elderly and handicapped transportation programs, the Montana Departments of Commerce and Social and Rehabilitation Services are stressing that local programs begin to coordinate and cooperate with each other. Communities must use their dwindling resources more efficiently if the elderly and handicapped are to receive the services they need.

The information contained in this report seeks to give a clear picture of current available transportation services for all Montana citizens.

EXISTING TRANSPORTATION SYSTEMS

There are three types of mass transportation systems operating within the State of Montana. These transportation systems include intercity carriers, community public systems and specialized transportation systems. For the purposes of this report, intercity carriers will be discussed under intercity transportation systems while community public systems, specialized transportation systems and taxi services will be reviewed under local transportation systems.

I. Intercity Transportation Systems

There are (10) intercity transit lines in the state that operate on regular schedules. (Refer to Table I) The only current passenger rail transportation service within Montana is provided by Amtrak which transverses the state east-west along a northern route paralleling U.S. Highway Amtrak's service is offered along this route seven days per week. In 1978, Amtrak's southern route, which paralleled Interstate Highway 90-94 was discontinued.

II. Local Transportation Systems

A. Community Public Systems

Montana communities that provide local public transportation include Billings, Butte, Great Falls, Helena, Missoula, Glasgow (Valley County), Poplar (Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Scobey (Daniels County) and

Circle (McCone County). The Billings, Great Falls, Butte, Helena, and Missoula transit systems are publicly owned either by the city or transit district and serve the general public. The Fort Peck Reservation and Blackfeet Reservation systems are owned and operated by their Tribes. Valley, Garfield, Daniels, McCone and Powder River county operations are combined elderly-handicapped and public systems which are sponsored by private non-profit organizations.

Another form of transportation which provides a vital service to the elderly, handicapped and general public of a community is taxicabs. As mentioned previously, taxicab companies have been declining in terms of total numbers in communities across the state. Currently in 1982, there are 20 cab companies in operation within 18 Montana cities according to permits issued by the Public Service Commission.

Since 1978 there have been several changes in the state intercity transit operation. Eight (8) companies have ceased to exist which include: Lost Trail Stage, Butte-Wisdom, Lincoln Transportation, Big Sky Express, Red River Valley Stages, Continental, Brown Bus, and Salmon River Stage. During this same time period, seven (7) bus companies have commenced operations.

For the most part, the passenger service routes formerly served by the eight transit companies which went out of business are now being accommodated by present carriers.

Figure 1 on the following page illustrates Montana's present intercity transit system. It should be noted that Fallon, Carter, Powder River, Garfield, McCone, Daniels, and Petroleum in the east and Madison, Sanders and Liberty* in the west do not have any intercity passenger service.

* Amtrak does not stop in Liberty County
